Instructions

For two servings, arrange a small bed of microgreens on each small salad plate, about a 1/2 cup per serving. Sprinkle a sparse layer of fresh basil over the bed of microgreens.

Slice the heirloom tomato, medium-thin slices about 3/8" thick. A large heirloom tomato should produce about 5 to 6 slices at this thickness. Arrange 2 to 3 slices on top of each bed of greens.

Sprinkle another layer of basil slices over the tomatoes. Sprinkle about 1 tablespoon of crumbled feta cheese over the top.

Prepare a simple vinaigrette of two parts extra virgin olive oil (about 2 tablespoons) to one part balsamic vinegar (about 1 tablespoon). Mix thoroughly and drizzle over the top of the tomatoes and feta cheese.

Season with fresh sea salt over the top.

Notes

Microgreens are showing up more often these days on some of our trendy California menus at specialty restaurants. Recently, to our delight, we've begun to find microgreens at our local farmers market here in Southern California. Micro-greens are thin and delicate baby sprouted versions of various salad greens, leafy vegetables and edible flowers. Varieties that we've found include micro-fennel, micro-arugla, micro-spinach, micro-chrysanthemums, and micro-celery. These delicate greens make a terrific garnish and add a wonderful explosive burst of flavor and punch to your dish.

We used yellow heirloom tomatoes as shown in the photo. OK, we also snuck in a few slices of fresh red tomatoes from the garden.
