Instructions

Place the dried porcini mushrooms in a quart sized mixing bowl. Pour 2 cups of boiling water over the mushrooms and let sit for 30 minutes. Pour off the water into a separate bowl through a strainer. Squeeze excess water from the mushrooms as you pour through the strainer. Add water back to the poured off liquid as needed to make 2 cups. Set aside.

In a large, heavy soup pot, heat the oil and add the onion. Stir as you cook, about 5 minutes until the onions soften. Add the cremini mushrooms and continue cooking about 3 minutes. Add the garlic, carrots, celery and 1/2 tsp of salt and continue cooking another 5 minutes. Add the porcini mushrooms, barley, the strained porcini mushroom liquid, chicken stock, bay leaves and thyme. Bring to a full boil, then reduce heat and simmer for about 45 minutes.

Remove the bay leaves before serving. Salt and pepper to taste.
